POINT NECESSARY.

June 1.—In a sermon on "The Laborer," Rev. Frank Pratt of the First Baptist church said that education cannot be adequate except from a human source. "The study of books and lectures are important," he said, "but they must be supplemented by the life of the laborer himself. The question has often been asked by theological students: 'What do the men and efficiency experts know about production, as if men and machines were commodities?' The better understanding of the whole problem only comes through the personal contact with laborers themselves."

WORKERS STRIKE.
